3. Reasons for the Differences and Revisions

(For the six months ended September 30, 2023)

Net sales and operating income underperformed the previous forecast due to a decrease in sales volume resulting from a drop in demand associated with the global economic slowdown and a decline in production volume due to in-house plant troubles. Ordinary income and quarterly net profit attributable to parent company shareholders outperformed the previous forecast due to posting ¥9.679 billion in foreign exchange gains under non-operating income during the six months ended September 30, 2023 due to the progressively weaker yen in the foreign exchange market.

(Full year)

Rising selling prices due to rising naphtha prices and the progressively weaker yen for the second half of the fiscal year should contribute to higher revenue, but net sales and operating income are likely to fall short of the previous forecast due to lower sales volume caused by delayed demand recovery and lower-than-expected overseas market prices. However, improved non-operating income due to foreign exchange gains resulting from the progressively weaker yen should lead to a relatively smaller impact on ordinary income and current net profit attributable to owners of parent.
